

Studies have shown that children who have been exposed to media violence have a greater propensity toward engaging in violent activity themselves. Knowing this, I believe the current saturation of the media with violent content is negatively affecting our children, both in the development of social skills and their perception of acceptable public behavior.